For the past week or so, here in NYC there's been this awareness of the possible reinstatement of the death penalty that is making the news media go nuts. The problem is that most people who want to kill themselves or other people don't kill themselves or other people in the media. But certainly there's been some stuff in the media. And a number of people are making the headlines as they attempt to kill themselves by overdosing on drugs. Here's the photo from the NYT earlier this week: So, who are these people? Are they the next Dylan Klebold, Eric Harris or any of the others who have killed people in school shootings? Well, it's not the time yet to say for sure. But it's not too early to speculate that there may be some connection. But more immediately, a couple of other people have also made the headlines by killing themselves this week: Lori Vallow, who supposedly had a mentally-ill child she was supposed to be taking care of, killing herself with the family dog, and being found just dead. Lori Vallow. Not a number of people, just one. I don't know anything about her, really. But I bet if I looked through the media she probably would have plenty of mentions. So why don't I know anything about her? I suppose that's because I don't have time. I am a journalist. But I am not in the media, at least as far as the digital media go. It's hard to be in that world. I am just trying to write this. I am not trying to make money at it, which means that I am not in the business of just buying stories from the media. I am not a newspaper or an online outlet.
